Research

My research activity is in the field of data and information management and access. I'm currently leading within the Dipartimento di Scienze Fisiche Informatiche e Matematiche (FIM) the Information Systems Group (www.isgroup.unimo.it). My current interests mainly focus on information sharing and exchange in heterogeneous and distributed contexts, stream data management, and scalable data science. In the past, I worked on non-conventional data like textual information, tree-structured and graph-structured data, on temporal databases and schema versioning, and on personalized data access. On these topics, my research has been mainly centered around data and query models for effective access and data structures and algorithmic issues for efficient query processing.

The results of my research activity are published in more than one hundred papers. The full list of my publication is available at the following web page:

<http://personale.unimore.it/AddressBook/publications/fmandreoli>.

The values of some of the main metrics measuring the impact of my research activity are reported in the following:
